

This is comparing nineteen different versions of the bible. Most bibles have 1189 chapters; the next three numbers compare the verse, words and letters used in each bible. The last column is the number of unique words used in that version of the bible. The RSV was one of the first to reduce the number of verses. The number of words and letters depend on how wordy and how large of words used. Note how the Luther's bible used fewer words but more letters and was based on the Latin translation. The first two are based on the originals; they had only capital letters only. Hugo divided the Bible into chapters in 1250. Robert Stevens divided it into verses in 1551.

Here are the books, chapter and verse count, not necessarily the last verse, which have a different number of verses from one version to the next. Some copies of a version can have different verses omitted. For example in the Revised Standard Version Luke 22, some have verse 20 omitted and others have verses 43 and 44. In III John 1:14 has become two verses 14 and 15. When a verse is omitted, the rest of the verse numbers remain the same as the King James Version, which is considered to be the defacto for most other versions of the bible. Have fun reading different versions of the bible.

Use this page along with the other detail listings, one for each of the bibles. The values that are underlined are the minimal and maximal values for that column. The book Obadiah is not the only book with one chapter. The other books with one chapter are Philemon, II John, III John and Jude. Most of the newer bibles have combined or missing verses as compared with the KJV.
