A HISTORY OF THE SHAW FAMILY

John Shaw came from Ireland and settled in Pennsylvania (By another account it was one of his ancestors that immigrated to this country). He had two sons that we know of, Joseph Shaw and William Shaw. In one of the Indian raids on the early settlers, John Shaw was killed at a spring on Chenoweth's run (Chinoweth's or Chenowith's) where he and his sons, Joseph and William, were at work getting bark for tanning purposes and/or getting water. This is all that we know of this man and his family.

William Shaw, was one of John Shaw's sons, for which we have not found a birth date. When William was 12 years old he, his brother Joseph and their father found themselves in an Indian raid. William was taken prisoner and raised by Indians. John was killed. Joseph escaped on horse back. It is believed that it was the Wyandott tribe. William fought with the Indians on the Miami River, when they attacked St. Clair's Army on November 4, 1791, he was a grown man at this time. His brother Joseph was in command of a Kentucky troop in this attack. William, who became disgusted with savage life returned to his own people. General Harrison made his successful campaign against the Indians and fought the battle of Tippecanoe on November 7, 1811. William and his brother Joseph, were soldiers in the Tippecanoe battle. On the morning of the battle after it became light enough to see, the opposing forces they found themselves so close together, that an Indian recognized William and called him by his Indian name. He answered in the Indian tongue, and then immediately exchanged shots. William was wounded through one of his lungs. He died in July or August of 1812 as a result of hemorrhaging brought on by his return to Vincennes on horseback.

Joseph Shaw, son of John Shaw, was born on December 25, 1773 and came west with his father's family, to Jefferson County Kentucky near Louisville. In 1791 Joseph was in command of Kentucky troops in General St. Clair's campaign against the Indians in Western Ohio. On November 3, 1791 St. Clair's Army was encamped a few miles from the Indian villages on the Miami River. About sunrise the next morning, they were unexpectedly attacked by the Indians. History informs us the army was badly defeated and scattered. Joseph had his left arm broken between the elbow and shoulder. He fled from the battle field being pursued by an Indian. Crossing a deep ravine Joseph stumbled and fell into the top of a fallen tree at the bottom of the ravine, he laid there awaiting his fate. The pursuing savage came to the top of the bank and not seeing him turned back in pursuit of other fugitives. He lay there covered with fallen leaves until night. Then he left his hiding place, in hopes of returning to Fort Jefferson, which was somewhere near the present town of Greenville, Ohio. At night he was pursued and attacked by a pack of hungry wolves drawn by the scent of his blood. He had to keep them at bay by the vigorous use of a heavy club. It took him three days to reach the Fort by traveled at night for fear of being capture. During this time he was compelled to live on nuts and roots. The Surgeon of the Fort after a close examination of his wound, which had been undressed for at least three days and had become badly swollen, decided amputate the arm. Joseph firmly objected and by careful and skillful treatment it was saved. As a result of saving his arm he could never straightened it out ever again.

Joseph was married to Eleanor Gobin in Jefferson County Kentucky early on June 16, 1794. They were bonded by William McElroy on June 13, Eleanor was given by her stepfather William McElroy, witnessed by W. Pope and Nelly Goman, and married by Henry Batdorff. They had two sons, Nineveh was born on January 18, 1796 and William born two years later, which would be 1798. Eleanor died in the late 1790's, leaving Joseph with the two boys. He moved to Clark County Indiana, which is just North of Louisville, Kentucky, sometime during the beginning of the 1800's. He married his second wife Sarah Walker on April 23, 1801 who was born on January 1, 1783. They were married by Henry Batdorff, witnessed by John T. Gray and Bonded by James Walker on April 22, 1801. Both marriage records come from the Louisville Public Library. From this union they had nine children who were, Margaret born April 14, 1802, Renah born January 7, 1804, James born January 13, 1805, John born January 11, 1808, Nancy born January 18, 1811, Sarah born September 18, 1812, Mary born September 18, 1814, Gilead born June 26, 1817, Minerva born March 24, 1819.

Around 1808 or 1809 he moved to what was then Knox County Indiana, now the South end of Sullivan County not far from the cemetery on the West side of Shaker Prairie. Joseph was in Vincennes, Indiana at the time General Harrison was the Governor of the Indiana Territory, and had his celebrated conference with the powerful Indian Chief Tecumseh and his followers. It was in this council that the great chief told the General he lied. Joseph was a great admirer of General Jackson's military genius and daring, and supported him every time he was a candidate for the Presidency. Afterwards for the same reasons he ardently supported General Harrison for that office.

Joseph moved in the Spring of 1816 to the south end of Walnut Prairie near the narrows of the Wabash River. On November 22, 1816 Joseph Shaw obtained ownership of his farm in York Township of Clark County. The farm was made of four 80 acres plots in Section 13, Township 9 North, Range 11 West of the second principal meridian Clark County, Illinois. He purchased city lots in Marshall in block 21, which was the northwest corner of Washington and Cumberland streets, lot 3 for $8 and lot 6 for $30.

The land which is now called Clark county has had many names from its start in the 1790's. First it was Knox County Indiana, then St. Clair, Madison, Edwards, Crawford, finally on March 22, 1819 Clark County was formed as the North 2/3 of the East 1/2 of Illinois, and was not reduced to its present size until December 25, 1830. On April 26, 1819 Joseph was elected one of the three county commissioners, whose job it was to lay out public and private land. In 1819 he and two other men were appointed to lay out the election districts for the newly formed county of Clark. On July 16, 1821 he and another commissioner layout the main street and public square.

Joseph was made one of the first six Justices of the Peace. His solomon wisdom dispensed justice in cases ranging from settling debit claims up to $100 and to setting fines for small noise disturbances. The first court case tried in Clark County was on April 20, 1820 for which Joseph served as its foreman.

On June 4, 1840 Joseph attended a meeting at Springfield, Illinois of the old soldiers of the Battle of Tippecanoe under General Harrison. In May 1844 he and the writer of the book "History of Crawford and Clark Counties Illinois 1883" visited the Tippecanoe battle ground to attend a mass meeting of Whigs from all parts of the State and then heard "the old man cloguent of Indiana" Richard W. Thompson who was then in his prime and was one of the principal orators of the meeting, and in a most eloquent and thrilling terms advocated the election of Kentucky's great orator and Statesman Henry Clay to the Presidency. He was much disappointed in the result of the election and thought that the American people lacked in gratitude for his distinguished services to his country, in not rewarding him with the office.

Joseph Shaw was a man of marked traits of character firm and unyielding in his convictions of what he thought to be right. He was a faithful and unflinching friend, strong in his likes and dislikes, a man of unbounded hospitality keeping open house to all who came to his door. Joseph Shaw lived on his farm till October 1847 on his farm in Walnut Prairie and then moved to Marshall and died not long after on February 17, 1848.

He was with his command during the war and underwent all the dangers and hardships of the short but decisive campaign which closed with the defeat and dispersion of Indians at the battle of Ban' Axe on the upper Mississippi River. On July 24, 1832 his horse "got lame," as a result of which he went back to Fort Hamilton instead of going on to the Bad Axe River. In December of 1832 he went to Louisiana to amend the estate of his brother William who died Dec. 10, 1832.

The first school of higher education was formed in 1839, when a bill was passed forming the Marshall Academy. Nineveh served as one of the first trustees for the school. The civil or political division of the County was first Dubois Precinct and now York Township, of Clark County, Illinois. He filled the position of County Commissioner in Clark County in the early days of its history two or three terms and was a Major of Illinois Militia, and had frequent drill musters at Darwin when it was the County seat.
